

Tenure-Track Behavioral Neuroscientist, American University (DC)

American University

Department of Psychology

The Department of Psychology of the American University invites applications for a tenure-track position in Behavioral Neuroscience at the Associate Professor level effective Fall 2011.

Responsibilities include teaching, advising, mentoring and supervising the research of undergraduate and graduate students. Supporting students who are members of groups under-represented in the sciences (e.g., women and minorities) in these arenas is especially encouraged. The position also requires the successful candidate to conduct and publish research and participate in department, college and university service activities. The Department has doctoral programs in Behavior, Cognition and Neuroscience and in Clinical Psychology (APA-accredited) as well as a master's program in General Psychology.

Qualifications include Ph.D., experience in undergraduate and graduate teaching and strong evidence of scholarship, research and NIH funding. Send curriculum vitae, a letter describing teaching and research experience, (p)reprints and three letters of recommendation to: Chair, Search Committee, Department of Psychology, American University, Washington, DC 20016-8062. To insure full consideration, application materials should be received by July 11, 2011.
