

Senior Fellow, The National Research Center for Women & Families/Cancer Prevention and Treatment Fund, Washington, DC

The National Research Center for Women & Families/Cancer Prevention and Treatment Fund, a research-based advocacy organization dedicated to improving the health of adults and children, has the following opening:

We are seeking an experienced professional with excellent writing skills, a solid understanding of quantitative research, and grant-writing experience who can interpret and “translate” research findings into compelling and persuasive information for the public, policy makers, and potential funders.

Requirements:

A graduate degree in epidemiology/public health, medicine, psychology, or a related field is required. A MPH or doctorate is preferred. The ideal candidate will be attentive to details, well-organized, dedicated to health issues, have excellent oral and written communication skills, and work well individually and as part of a team.

This is a part-time or full-time position (at least 24 hours/week) for at least 8 months with a modest stipend (full-time equivalent salary of up to $40,000/year, with exact salary dependent on time commitment) and benefits. There is opportunity for continuation or advancement. You will work in a beautiful office a few blocks from the White House. Ideal for sabbatical or for a professional looking for an interesting and challenging part-time or full-time position or considering a change in career focus.

To Apply:

We will fill this position asap. To learn more about us, check out www.center4research.org and www.stopcancerfund.org. No calls please. Please send your resume and cover letter to info@center4research.org.